Description

A lovely brass perpetual desk calendar dating from the late 19th / early 20th century. The ornate brass case has windows for days of the week, date and month with brass knobs either side to change them. It has a small carrying handle and stands on four turned feet. It is in good condition for its age and is certainly a usable piece. The knobs turn the numbers smoothly and there are no major damages to the brass case. The text on the roll for days / numbers / months is a little worn in places but it is still readable. The carrying handle is slightly loose on the top and does turn but it is securely fixed. It has been lightly cleaned and polished and overall it displays very nicely. The best description comes from the photos so please look at them all carefully and if you have any questions just ask.
