Description

A pair of Edwardian cut lead crystal wine glasses c1900. Following the earlier Georgian style of a rummer, this pair of glasses shows more advanced techniques in the wide slice cut work on the bowl and the upper circular cut band of a stylised branch of leaves within outer lines. The glasses are substantial in weight, have a good ting denoting the lead content, have a short baluster stem and a pontil cut base. One glass is minutely heavier and lower than the other, typical of them being hand blown, but the difference is tiny and they still make a pair. Excellent condition, no damage.
