Description

This Edwardian guardian ring, made between 1912 and 1913, is a magnificent piece of history and elegance. Crafted from 18-carat gold and hallmarked in Chester, this ring reflects the fine craftsmanship and style of the early 20th century. Weighing 6.9 grams, it has a substantial weight that indicates its quality and durability. The ring is designed in a wide band style, popular during the Edwardian period, offering both a bold appearance and a comfortable fit. The size is L½, which is a common ring size, making it suitable for many wearers. Guardian rings were traditionally used to protect more delicate rings from slipping, but over time they have become prized as standalone pieces due to their distinctive style. This ring is not only an exquisite piece of jewelry, but also a piece of history, capturing the aesthetics and craftsmanship of its era. Its classic design and the rich luster of 18-karat gold make it a versatile accessory that can complement both modern and vintage outfits. Whether added to a collection of antique jewelry or worn as a unique and original piece, this Edwardian guardian ring is a timeless treasure.
