Description

This impressive and decorative vase was made at the Cranston Pottery Works, and this decorative pattern is called Tucan. It has a large onion-like bulbous body which flows into a tall, slender neck. The heavy glazed surfaces are produced in translucent shades of brown, blue and green which have been thickly applied and allowed to run and blend with each other as they were fired, giving the unusual mottled effect which is very tactile. In distinctive contrast, the neck has been decorated with a stylish tube lined collar of decoration which is in the form of stylised grapes and leaves, which are coloured and glazed in stronger tones, giving as a bold contrast. English, circa 1910
