Description

This is a beautiful antique early Victorian four door flame mahogany library bookcase, masterfully crafted in rich solid mahogany, circa 1870 in date. This magnificent bookcase has four glazed doors in the upper section, each opening to a cupboard with four shelves which can be adjusted according to the height of your books. It features four panelled doors in the lower section, two of which open to reveal spacious cupboards each fitted with an adjustable central shelf, the third has three drawers fitted with the original brass handles and the fourth is fitted with three useful slides. It has all its original working locks and keys, the shelves are all original and the drawer linings and bookcase back are also made from solid mahogany. There is no mistaking its superb quality and very grand design, which is certain to make it a talking point in your home and stand proud in whichever room you choose to display it. The bookcase breaks down for ease of movement - the base is one section, the upper section splits in half with two glazed doors to each half and then the cornice is one piece. Condition: In excellent condition having been beautifully restored in our works...
