Description

William Tate 1747-1806 Boy Blowing Bladder and mischievous girl after Joseph Wright exhibited at the RA in 1791. There is another one exhibited at the Derby Museum, it was common practice in the 18th Century to paint duplicate paintings known as series of versions of the same subject. William Tate studied under Joseph Wright of Derby and his style was very much informed by Wright. It was William Tate who was commissioned to complete Joseph Wrights unfinished portraits after he died in 1797. The painting will require some restoration.
