Description

A wonderful rustic antique Bakshaish carpet from the early 20th century, with large leaf designs and rustic variations of browns with muted pinks and darker blue tones, this is a tribal and ancient looking carpet. In good order and with a soft wool pile. Bakshaish carpets were woven in large and smaller sizes and often with bold geometric designs, and vivid colours. Their designs can be quite abstract and often comprise of a central motif which sprawls out in one large design to the corner spandrels or with a smaller medallion inside a larger medallion. Generally older pieces were more open than younger examples woven from the Heriz region in the North of Persia. The charm and characteristics of antique carpets from this region woven in the late 19th century are simply wonderful. A rare example of tribal weaving.
