Description

An outstanding Scottish oak refectory table by Whytock & Reid of Edinburgh, dating from the magnificent Victorian era. The table's top bears some historical marks (as shown in the images), which only enhance its rustic charm and character. It is supported by four beautifully turned legs, united by a solid oak stretcher for stability and elegance. As with all antiques, minor imperfections are present, but this piece remains structurally solid with a rich, warm colouring and striking grain patterns. A splendid addition to any home, it exudes character and timeless appeal. Measuring nearly six feet in length, the table comfortably accommodates four to six diners, making it a versatile choice for both daily use and special occasions. Whytock & Reid was a distinguished Edinburgh-based furniture-making firm, operating from 1838 to 2004.
