Description

Antique Georgian wool embroidered picture with painted silk sky of a mother and child beneath a tree with faces and body painted on paper, very finely undertaken. There are also two other faces on the floor which are finely painted. These could possibly be depicting Janus, when researched it can symbolise death but also moving on in life & rebirth and change so possibly a transition from the child to becoming an older child or possibly just two death masks of a child and father I cannot be certain. The hair has been finely drawn and the embroidery has been well executed. There are some paint losses on the paper and a few very small insect holes in the wool areas. They are old holes, however, I did put the complete frame/picture in a bag with natural non invasive non chemical moth balls as an extra measure. Unusual embroidery with paper insertions in old verre eglomise frame old glass with air bubbles. Overall dimensions 46.5 cm x 34.7 x 2 cm. Some slight wear & losses to the frame. The back appears to be original although tired and the backing board split. I ship worldwide, please contact me for a postage quote or for further details. All items will be well packed and ...
