Description

This is an antique telescope, an English six-draw terrestrial or maritime instrument, dating to the Victorian period, circa 1860. Perfect for bird watching, landscape appreciation, wildlife, or maritime observation. Equally suitable for observing the night sky. A pleasingly rare six-draw configuration, seldom seen in Victorian field optics. Crafted in lightly aged brass, displaying a rich golden patina across the tubes. Primary barrel dressed in a gently time-worn leather jacket, offering tactile charm. Features a sliding sun shade to the objective end, enhancing clarity in bright conditions. Swivel dust cover to the eyepiece for protection when not in use. Smooth draw action throughout, with a well-engineered mechanical feel. Designed for terrestrial observation or recreational maritime use. Supplied with a London Fine oak and brass 'Captain's Stand' for display. A desirable addition to collections of scientific instruments, Victorian travel gear, or nautical antiques. Elegant and functional, this six-draw telescope exemplifies mid 19th century British craftsmanship, ideal for display in a study, observatory, or gentleman's cabinet of curiosities.
