Description

This is an antique six seat dining table. An English, country house refectory table in oak, displaying Gothic Revival taste, dating to the late Victorian period, circa 1880. Bold and characterful Victorian refectory table, steeped in ecclesiastical charm. Crafted from select oak stocks, offering fine grain interest and deep caramel tones. Four-plank top with a gently tapered edge for a comfortable dining experience. Of practical height for modern use, with a dining height of 78cm (30.75"). Delightful support stiles unite the top with the fascinating base. Striking canted supports adorn the central stretcher, delivering strong visual presence. Stands upon a pair of long trestle feet with broad square toes for excellent stability. Suited to seating six diners, making it ideal for a farmhouse kitchen or informal dining room. Comfortable kneehole clearance to each side of 75cm (29.5"). Exhibits appealing Gothic overtones, with subtle architectural styling throughout. This fine example of late Victorian design combines robust construction with timeless country house appeal, making it a distinguished centrepiece for both traditional and rustic interiors.
