Middleton Todd has been described, by fellow artist, Robert Buhler, as 'by far the most sensitive and accomplished painter of his generation' (Foreword to Works from the Studio of A R Middleton Todd, Stow on the Wold: Fosse Gallery, 1985). His mature achievement as a portraitist was founded on a versatile oeuvre, in which he produced paintings, drawings and etchings of a wide range of subjects that included figures, landscapes and still life compositions. He particularly enjoyed drawing nudes in pastel, in emulation of his hero, Degas. Though modest and self-critical, he passed on many...
