Description

DESCRIPTION A striking pair of tall 19th-century Gothic Revival brass table lamps, converted from ecclesiastical altar candlesticks and retaining a rich, aged brass finish. The lamps have particularly decorative pierced coronet-form drip pans above tall barley-twist columns, with knopped stems terminating in broad stepped circular bases raised on cast lion-paw feet. Their height and strong architectural form give them considerable presence, making them particularly effective as a pair of statement lamps in both period and contemporary interiors. The candlesticks have been sympathetically converted for use as table lamps and are fitted with bayonet bulb holders. The pair varies slightly in the height of the original coronets, although the bulb fittings have been positioned so that the overall lamp heights correspond. A handsome and unusual pair of substantial 19th-century brass lamps with excellent decorative character. DIMENSIONS Overall height: 72 cm Height to coronet: 58 cm and 62 cm respectively CONDITION The lamps are in good, solid condition with an attractive aged brass surface and patina. There are marks, knocks, scratches, tarnishing and areas of wear commensura...
