Description

A good example of a WWI period signalling telescope on a military folding tripod. The telescope itself is made of lacquered brass and the main tube is clad in brown leather. It is a three draw telescope with an extending sunshade and the eyepiece tube is engraved with the maker's name "Dollond London. Signalling Telescope. No.10107". It comes with an additional lens in its own leather case marked "LOW" and the other lens is marked "HIGH". The telescope comes with its original protective leather end caps with buckle to keep them together. The telescope comes with a folding tripod with adjustable mount, tightened by a wing nut. The telescope mount is engraved "Houghton Butcher MFG Co Ltd. 1917" and it also has the military crow's foot. Fully extended the telescope measures 31" (79cm) and the front lens is approximately 2 1/2" (6.5cm) wide. On the tripod it stands approximately 11 1/2" (29cm) high. The telescope is in excellent original condition. It has been lightly cleaned and displays beautifully. The tubes are in good order with a couple of small dinks but nothing major and a smooth but firm draw action. The optics through the telescope are good and the lenses are unda...
