Description

An unusual small 17th century oak food cupboard having a single door and vented panels. The cupboard has been converted into a coffer, probably sometime in the 19th century so the elm top is later. The original top would have been pegged to the top rails, you can see where the pegs were all located, the interior also has slots at one end for a small shelf. Its possible that the stiles were once much taller as they are very low now for a cupboard. There is signs of old wood worm in the top but otherwise it is in good condition.
