Description

A beautifully proportioned Scottish Victorian kitchen dresser in solid pine, showcasing the honest craftsmanship and utilitarian charm of late 19th-century rural furniture. The natural finish highlights the warm grain and mellow patina of the wood, with subtle wear that speaks to its long domestic history. The upper section features twin banks of small drawers—each with original turned wooden knobs—set above a generous open shelf. The shaped backboard adds a gentle flourish to the otherwise practical form. Below, three drawers sit above a trio of panelled cupboard doors, each with distinctive diagonal and vertical plank work. Two doors retain their brass drop handles and brass swing bar locks. The interior offers ample storage, making this piece as functional as it is characterful. Standing on short, sturdy feet and built to last, this dresser is a fine example of Scottish furniture.
