Description

A rare and beautifully preserved Georgian rummer glass, circa 1810, featuring Masonic engravings on all five sides and a distinctive lemon squeezer foot. This ceremonial piece blends symbolic depth with masterful craftsmanship.

- Side One: A Star of David within a circle, flanked by architectural arches and columns, evoking sacred geometry and structural symbolism.
- Side Two: A crescent moon and stars, a classical column with a sphere, and the all-seeing eye, representing cosmic order, enlightenment, and divine oversight.
- Side Three: A radiant all-seeing eye, a leafy branch (likely acacia, symbolizing immortality), and geometric forms reflecting Masonic ideals of balance and virtue.
- Side Four: A shield-like emblem, possibly a lodge crest or symbolic coat of arms, framed by scrollwork and ornamental flourishes.
- Side Five: A composition of triangles, squares, and lattice patterns, etched with precision to form a decorative and geometric tableau—suggesting themes of order, structure, and craftsmanship central to Masonic philosophy.

The glass is hand-blown, with a solid stem and a square base featuring the classic lemon squeezer design, typical of early 19th-century...
