Description

At first sight this looks like a classic Mazlaghan with its serrated diamond dominating the main field but the weave is finer and the presence of a strong synthetic red points to the nearby district of Malayer. The red has faded on the front to a pleasant hue, the wool is very shiny too which makes the rug come alive. The presence of abrash in the red background gives a really strong impression of depth with the red field opening out behind the central lozenge. It is also finely woven which makes for a well drawn design. This is an inexpensive rug with a classic look. This is in good condition. It has synthetic colours throughout all of which have some fading and there is a small repair to the pile.
