Description

This is a superb antique explorer's saddle flask, crafted in England during the Edwardian period, circa 1910. This charming glass and silver plated riding bottle is housed in its original leather carry case, designed for stylish explorers and equestrian pursuits. Featuring the James Dixon & Sons maker's mark, this elegant piece showcases exceptional craftsmanship, ideal for collectors or as a decorative accessory. Delightful Edwardian explorer's flask, dating to circa 1910. Crafted from quality glass with a tapering body in original, intact order. Silver plated collar stamped with the James Dixon & Sons trumpet mark. Twist-lock lid keeps contents secure, ideal for travel or riding. Accompanied by its original antique leather case with saddle straps. Attractive rich patina to the leather, showing character and history. Superb example of early 20th century equestrian accessories. Perfect as a collector's display piece or stylish barware addition. This Edwardian saddle flask is a wonderful collector's piece that blends practical design and period charm, making it an exceptional addition to any vintage barware, equestrian, or travel memorabilia collection.
