Description

Antique Edwardian Carved Walnut Nursing Chair. An attractive nursing chair with its original upholstery. This is a beautiful example of a late 19th to early 20th-century Edwardian nursing chair, crafted from fine carved walnut. This piece is a fantastic find for a collector or an institution looking to preserve a slice of history. The chair features an elegant, detailed, open-carved backrest that showcases the era's taste for decorative woodwork. Its low, comfortable stance is characteristic of nursing chairs, which were designed to be used for tending to children. What makes this chair particularly special is its original upholstery. The faded damask fabric, while fragile and worn from over a century of use, tells a story. It has a beautiful patina and offers a glimpse into the original design intent. The tufted back and piped edges are still present, showcasing the original craftsmanship. Crucially, the inner padding appears to be in very good condition, meaning a re-upholstery project would be a straightforward task of simply replacing the top covering, rather than a full internal rebuild. This significantly simplifies and reduces the cost of any restoration work sho...
