Description

A magnificent Victorian mahogany extending dining table dating from the 19th century, featuring a traditional crank-handle mechanism. The table rests on four beautifully carved cabriole legs with shell motifs to the knees and striking lion paw feet, adding elegance and character. The warm mahogany surface opens smoothly with the original winding handle, allowing for the insertion of an additional leaf to extend the dining space when required. The craftsmanship and decorative details highlight the quality of this timeless piece, which remains in excellent condition for its age. Ideal for both everyday use and formal dining occasions, this table combines practicality with antique charm, making it a wonderful centrepiece for any traditional or eclectic interior. width extended with leaf 176 cm clearance under table (floor to apron) 59 cm. A superb antique dining table that will elevate any dining room setting.
