Description

A Nineteenth Century decalcomania glass table lamp; decorated with chinoiserie figures, butterflies and birds on a blue ground. The shade is sold separately and is priced at £480. Circa 1860 The measurements include the shade. Converted into a table lamp from a vase. This can easily be reversed if desired. This lamp is wired and tested for UK current. It can easily be converted to U.S or European current. Decalcomania is a transfer printing technique developed during the Eighteenth Century. The interior of the vase would be covered in wet paint and a design on paper is then pressed against the wet surface. When the paper was removed an image was left behind-transfer printed. This design was then decorated by hand.
