Description

A fine late Victorian oak drop-leaf dining table dating from around the 1880s. The table features a rectangular top with chamfered corners and two drop leaves, supported on beautiful barley twist gate legs with pad feet. Practical and versatile, it comfortably seats 6-8 when fully extended, while folding neatly to a compact size when not in use. A true example of English craftsmanship, full of charm and character. In very good antique condition, with minor age-related marks and wear as expected from a piece of this period. Strong, stable and ready for use. Width (open): 136 cm A rare and attractive piece that would make a statement in any dining room or kitchen.
