Description

A fine Victorian mahogany drop-leaf dining table dating from the late 19th century. This versatile piece stands on turned legs united by stretchers, with twin drop leaves that can be extended to create a generous dining surface. When folded, the table is compact and space-saving, making it ideal for both large and small interiors. The warm patina of the mahogany combined with elegant Victorian craftsmanship makes this a highly practical yet decorative piece of furniture. In very good antique condition. Solid and sturdy, with minor age-related surface wear consistent with use. Ready for immediate use. Width (open) – 137 cm A classic and versatile Victorian drop-leaf table – perfect for dining, entertaining, or as an occasional piece.
