Description

A beautiful antique English oak drop-leaf table dating from the late Victorian to Edwardian era (circa 1890–1900). Crafted from solid oak, this piece features a charming oval top with a rich patina and striking grain. The table stands on elegant barley twist legs joined by stretchers, giving it both strength and decorative appeal. The drop-leaf mechanism allows it to be compact when closed, making it perfect for smaller spaces, and to extend when needed, offering flexibility as a dining, occasional, or side table. The table remains in very good antique condition with light, age-related wear that adds character without compromising quality. A highly practical and decorative piece for both traditional and eclectic interiors. Width (open): 89 cm
