Description

An exceptional late Victorian to early Edwardian solid oak drop-leaf table, dating from around 1880–1900. This beautifully crafted piece features a rich oak grain top with shaped edges and elegant barley twist legs joined by H-stretchers, providing both strength and decorative appeal. The twin drop leaves fold neatly when not in use, allowing the table to function as a compact side table or to expand into a small dining table when extended — a perfect combination of practicality and antique charm. The table retains its original finish and warm patina, showcasing over a century of craftsmanship and character. Solid oak Width (open): 120 cm Excellent antique condition, minor surface wear consistent with age.
