Description

An elegant late Georgian mahogany dining table with a wonderful, highly polished top, a reeded edge frieze, and being mounted on ring-turned tapering legs that are finished with brass castors. This table is comprised of two D-end sections and a central leaf, making it extremely versatile. It can be used as a full-size dining room table, a smaller breakfast/kitchen table or as two separate D-end console tables butted up against a wall. The overall condition is superb with only very light age-related wear and tear. Please see images in order to appreciate the condition of this table. Please note: the dining chairs shown are available in a separate listing. Additionally, the table is supplied with four Georgian brass clips to hold the table together when used in its extended formation.
