Description

This impressive mid-17th-century oil painting by Flemish artists Pieter Bout (1640 to 1645-1689 to 1719) and Adriaen Frans Boudewijns (1644-1719) depicts an extensive mountainous Rhineland landscape with river, ruins, cattle and sportsmen. It's a fine example of their collaborative work. Amid the imposing forms of nature, three noblemen on horseback pursue their dogs along a wooded track. Several figures follow, carrying ample supplies for the journey. Beyond, the view extends towards lush pasture and distant peaks, while cattle amble before a nearby dwelling. Wherever the eye falls, there's interest - including a hilltop ruin mid-left. Bout and Boudewijns joined forces on numerous works, with Boudewijns handling the landscape and Bout adding carefully rendered figures. It's said that the two met during a stay in Paris when Boudewijns was in the service of Flemish painter Adam Frans van der Meulen. By collaborating, the viewer is presented with the best of both worlds - Boudewijns' rugged interpretation of a view, almost akin to a stage set, and Bout's animated characters. They produced a rich oeuvre when working jointly, but we can find only one other example at this s...
