Description

This antique French dressmaker's mannequin dates from the turn of the 19th to 20th century. The body is wrapped in linen that has developed a patina over time; the fabric remains intact aside from the anticipated stains and halos associated with age and careful handling, which harmoniously integrate with the overall aged appearance. While originally accompanied by a stand, this element is no longer present. The mannequin reflects the fashionable silhouette of its era, characterised by a slightly compressed bust, a narrow waist sometimes even narrower (wasp waisted), and a subtly accentuated posterior. This piece presents an attractive decorative option suitable for shop displays as well as in a chic boudoir interior.
