Description

A Very Fine Quality Regency Period Mahogany Twin Pillar Extending Dining Table Having Exceptionally Well Figured Top To Tilting Ends And Original Removable Leaf Raised On Turned Central Columns And Elegant Four Splay Scrolling Bases With Superbly Carved Decoration. This regency mahogany dining table is of quite exceptional quality. The mahogany used in its construction is the best timber which would have been available on the market to the original cabinet maker at the time and the quality of craftsmanship displayed in the execution of the carved decoration throughout is again superb. The design is of relative typical form for a twin pillar table in the late 18th, or early 19th centuries, whereby you have two individual end sections, which can then be joined together with, or without the additionally supplied leaf. The leaf on this table is of course original, which again is excellent news. When positioned together in whichever format is preferred the different sections are of course rigidly held together by brass clips, making the table nice and sturdy to eat at. Another nice feature not often seen is that both ends have tops which can be tipped. Therefore when the tab...
