Date of manufacture: 19th Century

Description

This item is a 19th-century workbench and chair, traditionally used for shoe making and repair. The front wooden block features a metal ring and an opening designed to fit an iron shoe last, enabling the cobbler to efficiently work on footwear. The piece is handmade and shows signs of old inactive woodworm, which have been treated for added assurance. Such tools seldom endure the effects of prolonged use, making them rare. Their historical significance and distinctive craftsmanship contribute to their appeal in both contemporary and traditional interiors. Dimensions: 50cm x 15cm x 43cm h
