Description

The Yomut are one of the largest of the Turkmen tribes that migrated across Central Persia for centuries. This 'chuval' or large storage bag, dates to around 1880 and is a very nice example of the weaving skills of these nomadic weavers. The guls which dominate the field are nicely drawn and quite individual in their size and shape. Note the interesting secondary ornaments, and so-called ivory 'bat' border. Very good dyes have been used that have created a subtle yet striking artifact which is both collectible and decorative. Professionally cleaned and in excellent condition.
