Description

A beautifully preserved antique taxidermy Nightjar (Caprimulgus europaeus) presented in a traditional Victorian glass-fronted display case. This exquisite specimen captures the delicate plumage and lifelike stance of the elusive nocturnal bird, set against a hand-painted blue backdrop with naturalistic moss, grasses, and scenic groundwork. The wooden case, with its classic black-painted frame and original glass, enhances the timeless appeal and authenticity of the piece. Dating from the late 19th century, this museum-quality example would make a striking addition to any natural history collection, antique interior, or curiosity cabinet. Perfect for collectors of Victorian taxidermy, ornithological specimens, or those seeking a unique heritage decorative piece with genuine historical character.
