Description

The early 18th-century flintlock pistol has a rounded lockplate neatly signed "T Henshaw", the maker recorded as an active London gunmaker of the early Georgian period. Fitted with a 5.5 inch cannon-form screw-off barrel with visible threaded joint at the breech, smooth-bored, and retaining good definition to the baluster ring mouldings. The pistol has engraved brass mounts, including trigger guard, butt plate, and a shaped wrist escutcheon, all showing attractive early 18th-century engraving. The walnut grip is well-shaped with correct Queen Anne form and pleasing patination. Action functioning; metal and wood with honest age wear consistent with period. A strong signature, good screw-off barrel and original brass furniture. A scarce and genuine example of a Queen Anne pistol by a recognised London maker. Overall length: 31cm.
