Description

C. Hindley & Sons, formally known as Charles Hindley & Sons, was an important London furniture-making and decorating firm active throughout the 19th century. The company operated from around 1820 until 1892, with premises on Berners Street and later at 134 Oxford Street. Their business expanded significantly in 1844 when they acquired the well known cabinetmakers Miles & Edwards, allowing them to broaden their offerings in cabinetmaking, upholstery, retail furnishings, and interior design. The company's work was known for its high quality and stylistic variety. Rather than focusing on a single decorative style, C. Hindley & Sons produced furniture in Gothic Revival, Neoclassical, Louis revival, and Arts & Crafts styles. They catered to both middle class and wealthier clientele, employing talented craftsmen and designers. Their output included writing tables, davenport, dining sets, cabinets, decorative panelling, and chimneypieces, all crafted with attention to detail and fine joinery. The firm served a wide range of customers, including members of the aristocracy and occasionally royal residences such as Buckingham Palace. Their furniture was admired for its quality, b...
