Description

We are delighted to offer this stunning antique Georgian 9ct gold diamond cluster ring made c.1830. Stunning and glamorous, this ring offers an attractive and irresistible presentation for antique jewellery and diamond lovers. Six old-cut diamonds surround one single larger diamond in the centre, forming a lovely flower-like cluster presenting a striking design, particularly highlighted under natural sunlight. Depending on the angle and lighting, the diamonds twinkle intensely in such an enchanting manner with specs of fire that can also be seen. The old mine cut diamonds and the surrounding setting are typical of the Georgian period; the ring's shank may have been later altered or re-shanked with a later piece, however, the colour remains in unison with an antique rose colour 9ct gold. Whether it be for wearing as a contrasting piece of jewellery among other pieces or as an independent single ring, such allure is bound to be a conversation starter and a statement piece. Diamond is known to be the birthstone for April. A stunning ring for a special individual or as an indulging gift to oneself. The ring is unmarked as is common with articles of this period and as s...
