Description

An Edwardian captain's chair with a beautifully time-worn elm dished saddle seat combined with a beech arm structure and undercarriage. The chair has the upright stance and practical geometry associated with early twentieth-century clerical and desk seating, offering comfort and a functional, honest presence. The worn front edge of the seat shows the natural erosion of long use, giving the piece great character and charm. Presented in good antique condition with a sound frame, historic wear to the seat edge as shown and a consistent aged finish throughout. Clean, robust and ready to place in the home. English, circa 1910. H: 81.5 W: 66 D: 57 cm Seat height: 46 cm
