Description

George III mahogany side table This elegant George III mahogany side table is a fine example of late 18th-century craftsmanship, displaying clear Chippendale influence in its refined design and distinctive chamfered legs. Chippendale to make a square leg to look more refined came up with the feature of chamfering the back of the leg to make it more sleek, this idea was taken on by cabinetmakers who used this when making their furniture. Crafted from beautifully figured mahogany, the table features a long, well-proportioned drawer fitted with its original Chippendale fretwork brass handles, adding charm and authenticity. The clean lines, square chamfered legs and balanced proportions make this piece suitable for both period and contemporary settings. Its generous surface area makes it ideal as a side table, hall table or small writing table, while the craftsmanship reflects the sophistication and elegance of the Georgian era. A superb piece for collectors or anyone seeking a genuine antique with timeless style.
