Description

This elegant Art Deco travel clock, crafted for Harrods of London in the 1930s, is a superb example of early 20th-century design. The clock features a striking chrome-plated case with clean geometric lines characteristic of the Art Deco movement, offering both style and sophistication. Recently fully restored to working order by a qualified horologist, it runs reliably and displays excellent timekeeping while retaining its original period charm. The dial, hands, and casing present beautifully, with light, age-appropriate character that enhances its authenticity. Accompanying the clock is its original leather carry case, a rare surviving accessory that adds to its desirability and collectability. The case shows gentle wear consistent with age and remains structurally sound, providing both protection and historical context. A fine decorative object and functional timepiece, this Harrods Art Deco clock is ideal for collectors, interior decorators, or anyone seeking a refined piece of 1930s design history.
