Description

We are delighted to offer this splendid antique late Victorian/early Edwardian diamond pendant/brooch necklace made c.1900. This pendant features a wonderfully striking design with a silver front to match and reflect the clear and white tone of the diamonds. Intricately crafted with beautiful curves and interlocking motifs, the pendant is a wonderful example of fine antique jewellery, distinguishing itself from contemporary pieces. The pendant is embellished with an array of diamonds of graduating sizes to complement each section with a single teardrop pearl at the bottom. Four round cut diamonds accentuate the overall look and sparkle magnificently and are complemented by the old rose-cut diamonds surrounding them. The silver front allows for the diamonds to sparkle even more and presents a uniform white appearance that twinkles in a chic and mesmerising way. Owing to this pendant also featuring a pin, it could also be worn as a brooch and offers versatility upon pairing with your outfit. Whilst splendid in a collection or on display, better yet, this piece would grace many outfits - whether on a special occasion or at an evening party where diamonds would glisten an...
