Description

A refined 19th-century oil on canvas depicting a young woman with powdered hair adorned with pink and blue flowers, painted in the manner of Jean-Marc Nattier. The sitter's softly modelled features and the restrained dark background recall the intimacy and elegance of French Rococo portraiture. The painting is set within its original gilt frame enriched with foliate and floral relief. The lined canvas bears the stamp of John Reeves, Artists' Colourman, Cheapside, London, indicating 19th-century conservation. Historical Background Nattier's portraits of court ladies during the Régence and Louis XV eras shaped the visual language of French aristocratic portraiture. His influence extended well into the 19th century, when artists replicated his aesthetic to satisfy collectors interested in the Rococo revival. Measurements • With frame: 52 × 58 cm (20.5? × 22.8?) • Inner image: 32.5 × 27 cm (12.8? × 10.6?) Condition The painting presents well, with a lined and stable canvas. Craquelure, minor retouching and gentle surface wear consistent with age. The frame remains solid and attractive, showing small areas of gilding loss and wear at the mitres.
