Description

Pair of Chinese Porcelain Wucai Lotus Form Cosmetic Boxes & Covers Circa 19th C Origin & Style: The boxes feature the distinctive Chinese Wucai polychrome enamel decoration, which includes underglaze blue and overglaze iron red, green, and other colors. Design: They have a five-lobed or foliate shape and are decorated with writhing dragons amidst clouds, chasing a flaming pearl. This dragon and phoenix motif is highly auspicious, often symbolizing the Emperor and Empress or marital bliss. Period: While the design is characteristic of the Wanli period, many similar items bearing apocryphal Wanli reign marks were produced later in the 19th and 20th centuries during the Qing dynasty. The pieces in the image include custom wooden stands. The mark on the base of the porcelain object reads in a six-character, two-column format, which is a traditional Chinese reign mark style. The characters read from right to left, top to bottom, and translate as. ????? (Dà Míng Wàn Lì Nián Zhì) Translation: "Made in the years of the Wanli reign of the Great Ming dynasty". Context of the Mark The Wanli Period: The Wanli Emperor reigned during the Ming Dynasty from 1573 to 1620. This period is ...
