Description

A charming Victorian wooden Canterbury, beautifully crafted with multiple turned spindles and standing on original ceramic castors. Designed in the 19th century as a refined storage piece for sheet music or newspapers, it remains both decorative and practical today. This example features three divided sections for organising magazines, books, or vinyls, as well as a lower drawer with original wooden knobs perfect for smaller accessories. The turned legs and spindles add a classic Victorian elegance, making it an ideal accent piece for a study, living room, or reading corner. Very good antique condition structurally sound, original castors move freely, light wear consistent with age.
