Description

A Stunning Antique Victorian Silver plated Kettle on Stand resting gracefully on an ornate stand with integrated burner, it was designed to keep tea or water warm at the table - adding not just function but opulence to any setting. The body and lid feature elaborate scrollwork and botanical engravings, skilfully hand-etched. A charming naturalistic touch, the spout, handle, and stand are intricately modelled to resemble asparagus spears- an elegant nod to Victorian design's fascination with botanical forms. Their textured surface adds visual depth and whimsy, while the sculptural detail offers both beauty and a comfortable grip – circa 1890. * Once likely a centrepiece at formal teas, now a treasure to display and admire. Measurements: Height on stand: 12" (approx. 30cm) Width spout to handle: 7 1/2" (approx. 19cm) Total weight: 1220g In good condition – Retains excellent form and function with light patina consistent with age. All components, including the hinge, stand, and burner, are intact and functional. A truly display-worthy piece that also remains practical for use.
