Description

This is a magnificent large oil on canvas painting in the 19th century manner depicting an interior genre family scene. The parents of two young children are preparing one of the girls hair into a pony tail whilst the other child looks on with interest. The colour and detail is amazing and the life like finish obtained by the artist is very professional and has successfully portrayed a warm and charming atmosphere in his work. The natural light is evident in the painting of the faces of each individual family member. AFTER Artist William Henry Knight (26 September 1823 – 31 July 1863) was an English portrait and genre painter. Life and work Knight was born in Newbury, Berkshire where his father, John Knight, was a schoolmaster. He was to become a solicitor, but gave up his law studies after two of his paintings were accepted by the annual exhibition of the Society of British Artists. He moved to London in 1855, taking lodgings in Kennington Road, Lambeth, and supporting himself by drawing crayon portraits while studying in the British Museum and in the schools of the Royal Academy. Following in the footsteps of William Mulready, he became a genre painter, his...
