Description

An exceptional 19th-century kidney-shaped writing table, displaying refined craftsmanship and elegant decorative detailing throughout. This sophisticated piece retains its original painted decoration, enhanced with finely worked giltwood detailing and charming Wedgwood-style plaques depicting classical cherub scenes. The table features a gracefully shaped top fitted with a leather writing surface, offering both practicality and visual contrast. Below, a single central drawer provides useful storage, seamlessly integrated into the design without interrupting the flowing form of the table. Raised on elegant fluted tapering legs, the table is united by a shaped stretcher fitted with an upholstered footrest, adding both structural balance and decorative presence. The proportions and kidney-shaped silhouette give the piece a light, refined appearance, making it ideal as a writing table, centre table, or statement piece in a sophisticated interior. This table remains in original, untouched condition, preserving the authenticity, surface character, and charm expected of a genuine 19th-century piece. The survival of the original paintwork and decorative elements adds considera...
