Description

A charming early 20th-century large oak drop leaf table, showcasing traditional craftsmanship and beautifully figured oak grain. This versatile piece features two folding leaves supported by classic gateleg supports, allowing it to be used as a compact side table or extended to a practical dining or occasional table. The table stands on turned legs with a stretcher base, giving it both stability and character. The warm oak tone and natural patina add to its authentic period appeal, making it suitable for both traditional and country style interiors. Width open 137 cm. Very good antique condition. Solid and stable, with light age related wear, surface marks, and minor signs of use consistent with age. These details are visible in the photographs and enhance the table's genuine antique character.
