Description

A charming small antique oak drop leaf table dating to the mid 19th century, featuring classic turned legs, a sturdy underframe and a practical gateleg construction allowing the leaves to be raised or folded as required. Compact in size, this piece is ideal as a hall table, occasional table, lamp table or compact dining table in smaller interiors. When fully opened, it comfortably offers additional surface space while retaining a pleasing, balanced proportion. Crafted from solid oak with a warm, naturally aged patina, the table shows attractive grain and honest signs of age consistent with its period. Width open: 100 cm Very good antique condition. The table is structurally sound and stable. The top shows visible age-related wear, including surface marks, darker areas, small old nail marks and gentle unevenness to the patina, all clearly visible in the photographs. These are consistent with age and add to the authentic antique character.
