Description

William IV mahogany library chair with bergère caning This elegant William IV mahogany library chair with bergère caning is a superb example of early 19th-century English design. Crafted from richly toned mahogany, the chair features a beautifully shaped curved back, seamlessly flowing into finely carved scroll arms and panelled sides. The original bergère cane work enhances both comfort and aesthetic appeal, offering lightness and refinement characteristic of the William IV period. The chair stands on carved tulip front legs terminating in brass castors, with gently splayed back legs that complete its graceful silhouette. Fitted with a plush, fine leather upholstered seat and back cushions for added comfort, this piece is ideal for use as a library chair, reading chair, or an elegant accent in any period or contemporary interior. A desirable and well-proportioned antique that combines comfort, craftsmanship, and desirable William IV design. Key Features Authentic William IV mahogany library chair Original bergère caning to back and sides Carved scroll arms and refined curved profile Plush upholstered seat and back cushion Carved tulip front legs with original brass c...
