Description

A fine quality 19th century French black slate perpetual calendar mantel clock with moonphase indication, by A Brocot & Delettrez, Paris, c. 1870. The impressive drumhead case flanked by scrolled decoration, supported by reeded columns terminating in half round capitals, beneath the moulded stepped base. Opening cast brass bezels to the front and rear, with a further rear opening door, allowing for easy access to all controls and parts. The 5" enamelled dial with Roman hours encircling a recessed centre with jewelled visible Brocot escapement set over another 5" enamelled dial giving full perpetual calendar information of month, day and date as well as moonphases. Both dials are in excellent original condition. The day of the month automatically corrects for the shorter months and thus takes the correct action on 28, 29 (for leap years), 30, or 31 day months. The fully restored eight day twin barrel clock movement with circular plates united by four pillars and rack striking the hours and half hour on a single bell, stamped to the front plate A Brocot & Delettrez, Paris. Both movements are of remarkable quality and design, in fully functioning restored order. Original brass...
